INTRODUCTION

The All India Disaster Mitigation Institute (AIDMI) is organizing a virtual roundtable titled 'Co-Creating Transformative Knowledge and Action' on October 12, 2022 at 03:00 pm (IST) to highlight the links between co-creating knowledge, societal transformations and sustainability. In the field of climate change adaptation and sustainability, co-creating knowledge implies using complimentary knowledge systems that promote transformation pathways.

In case of complex and intractable policy problems, co-created policy solutions which are bottom-up are more likely to generate usable actions and outcomes (Coggan et al.). Therefore, co-creating knowledge in the fields of climate change, environment and development policy is key to achieving enduring outcomes.

The co-created transformative knowledge and action can help in addressing complex social challenges and opportunities before, after, and during a disaster in changing climate.

OBJECTIVES

The objectives of the roundtable are:

- To better understand the concepts of co-creation and transformative knowledge.
- To illustrate how the concepts of co-creation and transformative knowledge unfold in public projects and policies in the marginal environments.
- To find out the nature and extent of benefits of co-creation and transformation to people and ecosystems.
- To indicate agenda for further research and action on co-creation and transformative knowledge.
